Persuasive Speaking

About Persuasive Speaking

Persuasive messages fill our environment. From signs and billboards to email and the web, communication intended to encourage change and incite movement is difficult to escape. Persuasion is the ability to communicate in a way that motivates others to understand, accept, and act upon new ideas.

In this project, you will learn methods to support your viewpoint, identify the most appropriate type of persuasive speech for your topic, and develop a presentation to convey your message powerfully. You will learn to deliver a persuasive speech and assess the effectiveness of your persuasive skills.

Introduction and Assignment

Introduction

The power to persuade is a hallmark of strong leadership and communication. A leader's ability to persuade others can determine their success.

Your Assignment

Purpose: The purpose of this project is to understand the types of persuasive speeches and deliver a persuasive speech at a club meeting.

Overview: Choose any topic that lends itself to speaking persuasively and prepare a speech. Present your 5- to 7-minute speech at a club meeting. If your Vice President Education approves a non-club event or group, your evaluator must be present for your speech.

Your speech must be persuasive. It may also be humorous, informational, or crafted in any style that appeals to you and supports your speech content.

Learning in Persuasive Speaking

Assess and Reflect

To assess and track your knowledge, complete the activity below by listing what you already know and what you wonder about the topic today. Add up to five items to each list. After you complete your project, you will have an opportunity to review your answers and add what you have learned.

Know

For example: I know how to identify the appropriate type of persuasive speech for my topic.

Wonder

For example: I wonder how to deliver a persuasive speech to an audience.

Competencies

The following is a list of competencies that you will learn and practice in this project.

- Understand methods for researching and supporting your viewpoint.
- Identify the most appropriate type of persuasive speech for your topic.
- Develop your viewpoint.
- Develop a presentation that appeals to an audience.
- Deliver your viewpoint with the intent of persuading an audience.

Purpose and Types of Persuasion

In a persuasive speech, your primary purpose is to influence the thinking or behavior of listeners. You can influence them in several ways.

Inspire

The goal is to inspire excitement in your audience about your topic or reinforce their existing ideas and beliefs.

Convince

You want to change audience members' opinions or persuade them to develop the same opinion you have.

Call to Action

After hearing your speech, you want audience members to take some type of action, such as visit a website or buy a product.

Though we can look at the types of persuasion as distinct categories, most often they occur in speeches or other types of communication in combination.

For example, if your goal is to move the members of your club to extend membership to an underrepresented group in your community, you might begin by inspiring members to reach out to the group and end with a call to action for each current member to invite a new member.

Each type of persuasion leads into the others. Developing a presentation that includes two or more will help you bring depth to your persuasive speech.

How to Persuade

Know Your Topic

Whatever your topic, research the issue thoroughly and look at different perspectives. Consider your goals, interests, and knowledge. In order to make a powerful argument, it is important to thoroughly understand the issue.

Include powerful, descriptive language whenever possible. The words you use have an impact on your audience. Once you have your topic and know your audience, the next step is to create a moving, impactful speech. In order to influence your audience, you need to address all three modes of persuasion.

Ethics

Ethics is about your credibility as a speaker. It's important in every speech but paramount in the persuasive speech. An audience needs to accept you as knowledgeable and trustworthy before considering changing their opinions.

Make sure to reference any research you've conducted on your topic. Include examples of your personal experience when dealing with similar issues or topics to support your subject or opinion.

Logic

Logic is a part of every persuasive speech. Your content needs to include components that address audience members' logical minds. In other words, every argument you present has to make sense.

Explain, in clear and concise terms, why audience members need to change their opinion or behaviors. Provide evidence to support your position from reputable sources. Comprehensive research on your topic will help you achieve a strong, logical appeal.

Emotion

Emotion contributes a powerful influence when you want to change the mind of another person. Evoking emotions such as happiness or empathy in listeners and relating these to your topic is a very powerful tool.

To change the behaviors or opinions of your audience members, you must deliver a message that appeals to their minds and emotions. By establishing yourself as a credible source and delivering a message that supports both their logic and emotion, you improve your chances of successfully persuading your audience.

While a strong persuasive speech will address all three modes of persuasion, it can also be tailored to emphasize one mode over the others. This can be effective if you know which mode will appeal most to your audience or best fit your specific topic.

Know Your Audience

Once you have decided on a topic, gather as much information as you can about your audience. Consider your listeners and their attitudes and beliefs about your subject and tailor your message to them.

The Agreeable Audience

Your audience may already agree with your opinion or viewpoint. Your goal is to strengthen and reinforce this agreement.

The Apathetic Audience

The group you face may not be interested in your subject or your views. One of your objectives is to convince them that the issue has a direct effect on their lives.

The Hostile Audience

When audience members oppose your subject or your viewpoint, an important part of your speech must address the merits of your position. The stronger the case for your point of view, the more likely audience members are to reconsider their perspectives.

The Uninformed Audience

Your listeners may be completely unfamiliar with your subject. Your first step in convincing this type of audience to accept your point of view is to educate them about the topic.

The Varied Audience

This type of audience contains a combination of audience members. You must include content that informs, convinces audience members of your subject's importance, demonstrates the merits of your viewpoint, and expresses why they should reconsider their own views.

Organize the Speech

- Organize and develop a speech that combines your knowledge and expertise of the topic with the appropriate factors that will influence your audience.
- Decide upon the best way to appeal to your audience.
- Create a speech that emphasizes your message and delivers your viewpoint persuasively.
- All your public speaking knowledge applies to your persuasive speech. The credibility of your message is at least partially determined by your presentation. Take the time to prepare and practice your speech to ensure the best opportunity for success.

You may choose to use the Persuasive Speech Outline Worksheet to help you organize your speech.

Deliver Your Persuasive Speech

Keep the audience engaged by connecting with them through personal stories and experiences that relate to your topic. Show your emotions to help them identify with you and your message. If your speech includes a call to action, make it a strong one that clearly defines what you want the audience to do.

Review and Apply

Before you complete the assignment, take a moment to read through the questions you see here. If you are not able to answer them comfortably, review the project.

- What are some methods for researching and supporting your viewpoint?
- What are the types of persuasive speeches?
- How will you support your viewpoint in your presentation?
- How would you write a speech using logic, ethics, or emotion?
